What is it?

That's the question asked yesterday by Mott Simms of Spout Spring when he brought a live bird by the Times-Virginian office for identification. Looked like a pigeon, or a sort of small wild duck, or then it may have been something else again.

Simms said a dog caught the bird and his brother captured it alive.

Truman Asks Editor Of Scottish Paper For Anthem Tracing

DUNDEE, SCOTLAND. — President Truman, according to a story in a newspaper here, has had his curiosity aroused as to the origin of his official anthem, "Hail to The Chief."

The paper, the People's Journal, published a picture of a letter addressed to the editor and signed, "Harry Truman." The Journal asked its readers to help out in the quest for information.

The letter quoted the President as saying he already had learned from the Journal one thing he didn't know, that the song was virtually pure Scotch. It said Mr. Truman would like to know more.

In an earlier issue, the Journal had reported that the tune of "Hail to The Chief" was said to "come from an old Gaelic air" and had found its way, somewhat changed, into Sir Henry Rowley Bishop's opera, "The Knight of Snowdoun." Sir Henry, though born in London, taught in Scotland from 1840 to 1843, and his opera was based on a poem by Sir Walter Scott, a Scotsman.

The words to "Hail to The Chief" are from Sir Walter's poem, "The Lady of The Lake." They were supposed to have been sung by the followers of a Scottish chief, Rhoderick Dhu of Clan Alpine as they rowed him down Loch Katherine.

The letter from Mr. Truman quoted the President as saying a clipping of the original story had been sent to him by a Mr. Campbell of Cleveland.

"If you can furnish me with any information other than in your paper of the sixth, I shall be most happy to have it," the paper quoted Mr. Truman as having written.

"If any reader can throw light upon it," said the Journal, "the editor will be glad to pass it along to President Truman."

Girl's Faith In Convict Wins Him Freedom in Court

BALTIMORE. — Because of a girl's faith in a man, he got out of jail, but he must make restitution of money obtained by forgery.

Criminal court judge Robert Franz suspended a 10-year prison sentence he had imposed on William J. Sansbury for forgery, placing him on probation for three years. The judge said he was suspending the sentence chiefly because of Peggy's faith in Sansbury.

The two met while Sansbury was an inmate of San Quentin prison where Peggy was an employe. They fell in love. When Sansbury was paroled he returned to Maryland to face two-year old forgery charges. Peggy took her life savings of $600 and followed him here from San Francisco and pleaded for his release.

Her plea was so eloquent, her faith in Sansbury so vast that the man she loved got his freedom. But they must not marry for a year and Sansbury must pay back his forgery take. That was the judge's ruling.

Pennsylvania Makes Claim To 'Kentucky Rifle' Title

LANCASTER, PA. — Pennsylvania has claimed the so-called "Kentucky rifle" as its own and thereby precipitated a storm of controversy in the Bluegrass State.

Pennsylvania hailed the gun's maker as one of the Keystone State's greatest pioneers. Kentuckians scoffed. 'Tis true, they conceded, that it wasn't a Kentuckian who made the rifle, but it built its greatest claim to fame in the hands of pioneer Kentuckians like George Rogers Clark and Daniel Boone.

The Kentuckians went on to point out that if Pennsylvania wanted to be that way about the matter, they might as well lift the "Swiss rifle," inasmuch as a Swiss Mennonite immigrant, Martin Meylin, made the first U. S. "long rifle" in a tiny storage shed near Lancaster in which he had set up a gun shop.

It all came about when Governor Duff, of Pennsylvania, proclaimed October 16 as "Pennsylvania rifle day," declaring that the state's "tremendous historical heritage" had been neglected.

Maurice Rehrbach, Swiss consul, in acknowledging Meylin's gunmaking genius said he was "proud that one of my countrymen had helped the Americans to gain their independence."

Gen. Jacob L. Devers, former chief of the army ground forces, praised the development of the Pennsylvania rifle. He said the principle of the soft leather "patch" used in the early guns is still utilized in today's modern rapid-fire rifles.

After the unveiling of the plaque, a rifle made by Meylin—the only known one in existence—was given to the Lancaster county historical society by Martin B. Mylin, seventh generation descendant of the maker.

And so the Pennsylvania rifle came home to rest.

Magazine Would Rip 'Jazz' Out Of Word Usage

MILWAUKEE, WIS. — The word "jazz," long an honored word in a wide circle of Americans, a word which became a synonym for an era in American manners and mores, will disappear from the language if a magazine called Downbeat has its way.

A horrid word to certain refined ears, the word "jazz" may be stricken from the language, root and branch and, likewise, root and toot.

The magazine hereinbefore referred to has announced a prize of $1,000 for the best word to replace "Jazz." The second prize will be a full night's free service of the Charlie Barnet band, and third will be the same privilege with the King Cole trio.

Some Suggestions

A palpitating jazzman might imagine some of the delightful suggestions that are snowing down on the editors of Downbeat. What would they say to such examples as "jumpmusic," or "hotarmony" or "tickleat," or "syncetune," or "dizzart," or "bopera?" Perhaps any of these might add something worthwhile to our vocabulary.

It is almost as difficult to find where "jazz" came from as to figure where, if anywhere, it is going. For one thing, "jazz" is Creole for "hurry up." Another suggestion is that "jazz" is an all African term for sing and jump, and "Jazzbo" Brown used to give out with a spirited brand of music that had the customers clamoring for "Jazzbo," and "Jazz."

Charlie (Chaz) Washington, a Vicksburg drummer, had the same exhilarating effect upon his audiences.

"Jaser" is a French word for "chatter" or "gossip."

But however jazz came into the language, some 50 or 60 years ago, it certainly has held on. When Paul Whiteman was the king of the craft he called his book "Jazz" and the fanciful French fancier of the art, Hugues Panassie, issues learned tomes on "le jazz hot."

No Easy Chore

The scholars of Downbeat will discover that it is no easy chore to toss out a popular locution. They will dutifully award their prizes for jazz replacement and will be mortified to hear the irreverent usage of the word "jazz" from then on indefinitely, just the same.

When the prohibition era ended, for example, laws were passed to ban the use of the word "saloon." It was felt that "tavern" had a more wholesome, ethical sound. But there are the unregenerate souls who still talk about "going over to the corner saloon." Actors and entertainers in the cabaret circuits speak of themselves as "working in the saloons."

The eminent Billy Rose describes himself as being in the saloon business and night club chronicles call themselves "saloon editors." Warrants are expected for all of them hourly. There are elements of the brewing industry that find the word "bartender" distasteful. They have suggested that term "retail salesman" be substituted, and some of the men at the spigot prefer to be called "purveyors," but the irreverent customers seem to think that all such ideas are merely jests—good clean gags.

GI's Shudder as 21 WACs Turn Out for Target Shoot

FRANKFURT, GERMANY. — It was a rough day for the GI's here as one of what they regarded as the biggest snafu's in Pentagon history got underway.

A directive stating that the women's army corps (WAC) shall remain unarmed was allowed to lapse. On that day, 21 determined members of the Frankfurt detachment of WAC's went out on the range for the first time.

They meant business. Garbed in baggy fatigue uniforms, hair carelessly squashed under steel helmets, they marched gaily to the Vilberg small - arms range, their .30 caliber carbines carried at the ready.

That was at 8 a.m. A dense fog hung over the field. The girls couldn't even see the targets. But let Range Sergeant McKee tell it:

"This fog may last all day. Why don't you come back some other time—maybe next summer?" he said.

"We'll wait," snapped Capt. Ethel Martin of Hooperstown, Ill., a forceful character if McKee ever saw one.

The fog lifted at 10 a. m. McKee reluctantly started to issue ammunition.

"These silly things won't go into the magazine," complained Pfc. Viola Schweder, of Milwaukee.

With exaggerated patience McKee took the cartridges from her and inserted them properly, the while explaining: "You have to put them in front ways. Otherwise you might shoot yourself."

The GI target pullers ducked into the pits like scared rabbits.

The Letter Box

Oakville, Va.

Times-Virginian,
Appomattox, Va.

To the Editor:

In reply to your call from Mr. Bragg of Appomattox High School regarding a barn wanted in which to practice basketball. I would like to recommend Oakville elementary school.

I believe the advantages that can be offered there are in perfect harmony with your needs. The team will never have to suffer from the heat as there are only a few delapidated wood stoves here and there which can easily be pushed aside, and fresh air is always abundant through the numerous holes in the doors, ceiling and floors. The floors are of a rough material and badly worn. The dull appearance of this building will never divert the minds of the players from their basketball.

In view of such advantages, I do not believe you would object to supplying your water needs by bringing along a bucket and dipper as the water is supplied by a hand pump in the yard. Sorry, no indoor restrooms are available.

For further information I refer you to the Appomattox School Board and the County Board of Supervisors.

Respectfully yours,
Mrs. O. W. Martin, Jr.
